Ropes & Gray LLP

SAMER MUSALLAM is a veteran antitrust enforcer who led major merger investigations across a range of industries as a former senior counsel to the assistant attorney general of the antitrust division at the U.S. Department of Justice. Samer's practice focuses on antitrust merger advocacy in strategic and private equity transactions, as well as representing and counseling clients through all phases of litigation before the U.S. Department of Justice and Federal Trade Commission. Samer has represented clients in complex private litigation, price-fixing class actions, merger clearances, monopolization lawsuits, dealer termination suits, and domestic and international antitrust investigations. His experience covers a wide range of industries, including medical devices, banking, airlines, telecommunications, fintech, wireless baseband chips, mining and material handling equipment, industrial materials, and the locomotive and railroad industries. Notably, Samer also served as trial counsel for the U.S. Department of Justice in opposing the proposed merger of two of the largest insurance companies in the United States in United States v. Aetna, Inc. and Humana Inc. The case resulted in verdict and judgment in the United States' favor.
